Subject: Re: transcript of chat re structures, etc
From: Barrett Brown <barriticus@gmail.com>
Date: 5/21/10, 5:16 PM
To: Clark Robinson <robinsonchicago@gmail.com>, Scott Mintz <scott.w.mintz@gmail.com>

Here also is our symbol, just in case something comes up to which it ought to be applied.

On Fri, May 21, 2010 at 2:10 PM, Clark Robinson <robinsonchicago@gmail.com> wrote:

> me: Wow! E D Kain, I follow his stuff on T/S, he is great.
> Barrett: I don't think I've seen it yet, I'll take a look > also > just had a couple quick thoughts > me: Justin Commu looks great, too, I will get something off to him later today, and some other people
> Sent at 12:33 PM on Friday
> Barrett: Have participants randomly matched and assigned a collaborative method and task > we should think up several sorts of methods by which two people could collaborate in a particular "structure," > and then randomly assign two participants to use that structure in coming to a conclusion or accomplishing some small task > this would give us insight into what might work best > also, having two participants randomly collaborate in general might produce interesting results due to the mixing of various skill sets > another thing
> Scott and I talked the other day about having there be a probability that any info pushed forward into either networks would have a chance of appearing somewhere else randomly in the network in addition to where it would usually be sent
> Sent at 12:37 PM on Friday
> Barrett: as means of ensuring that the raw material on one end of the network has a chance to appear at another portion of it, which I think will clearly have certain differing characteristics due to being "inhabited" by bloggers who have linked to each other, in the case of the media network > and which would thus possibly do something better with that raw material or have some other insight into it than would those from the region of the network from which it originated > it's a small thing, but possibly helpful
> Sent at 12:39 PM on Friday
> me: so a blogger on a lower echelon whose posts have merit but are being stifled by his immediate superior would have chance
> Sent at 12:41 PM on Friday

me: chance of wider readership despite an idiosyncratic bias of the blogger who brought him in Barrett: yeah, and in fact I think we should also integrate in similar methods to tackle any structural deficits that are still going to exist, like that one me: up in the paired collaboration model I am not sure what you mean by 'structures'
Sent at 12:44 PM on Friday
me: i am fishing for an example I guess
Sent at 12:45 PM on Friday Barrett: sort of like this there are various games like scattegories, scrabble, various card games, charades, whatever adults play at shitty parties and these all either have participants interpret input from each other or produce it together, according to certain rules we could design various procedures in a similar vein intent on producing different sorts of results, as if they had been filtered, distorted, magnified, etc metaphorically
we would then draw conclusions based on how the participants deemed the process method and what we see in the results and perhaps implement similar novel methods when it comes time to setting up the governing network or a template for procedures within sub-projects like Africa
Sent at 12:49 PM on Friday
Barrett: I'm going to ask some of our more abstract-professioned participants to try to think up such methods additionally we should set up another document containing various questions about both specific and general aspects of what we're doing and what we should be doing basically, little "reports" that can then be displayed in whatever documents deal with the aspect in question
Sent at 12:53 PM on Friday
Barrett: this is just a way of making sure that our participants have quick and easy access to everything that needs to be considered or determined and thus doesn't miss a chance to contribute his expertise or ideas
Sent at 12:54 PM on Friday
me: sort of sounds like we need an "internal systems" team (forgive the bureaucrat-speak) to find or maybe build the automated support for the interfacing of these pieces of content, This new guy Justin Commu sounds as if he could do that Sent at 12:58 PM on Friday
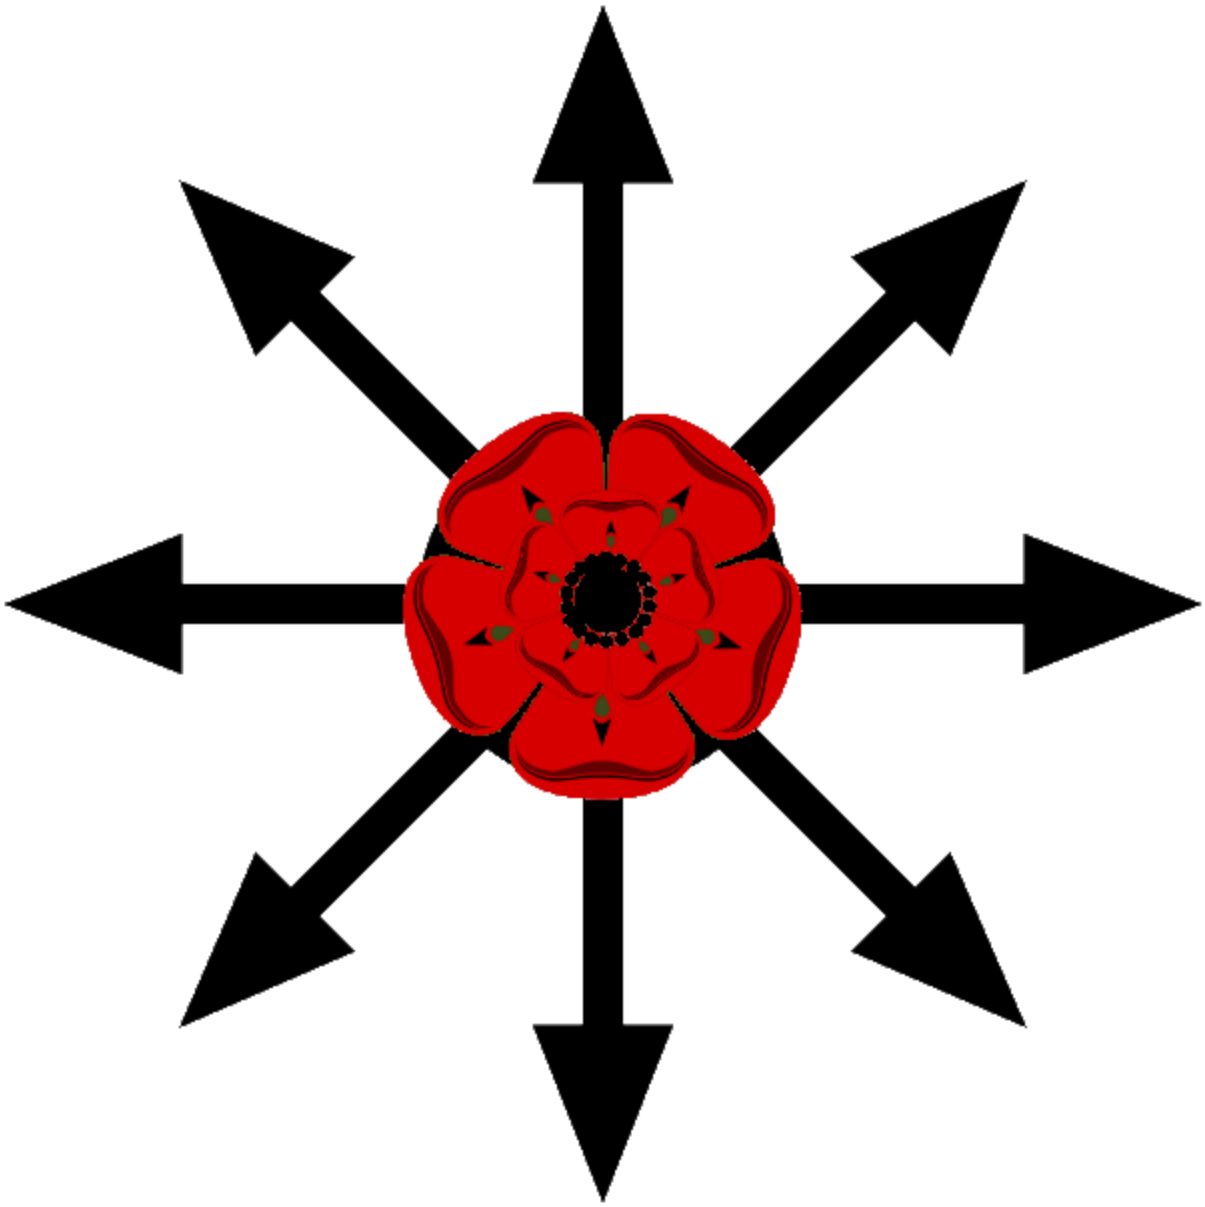
me: although if he is currently looking for employment, he may not have much time, once he finds it

> Sent at 1:01 PM on Friday
> me: how do I save this chat? I guess I can paste it into an e-mail and send it to myself
> Sent at 1:04 PM on Friday

--
Regards,

Barrett Brown
Brooklyn, NY
512-560-2302

PM.png



Attachments:

PM.png 38.4 KB